A Vibrant Space Created by Sisal Hemp Kubota Shigeo, Echo of the Ocean III (2019)

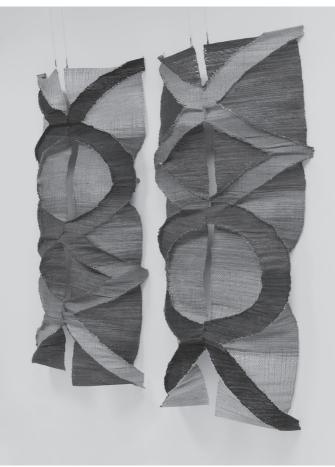

A pair of tapestries, woven from strong hemp fabric, display a gradual color transition from blue to pale green. The pink and purple bands at the top create a complementary color scheme with the bottom, producing vibrant hues. Focusing on its composition, the lower part consists of rectangular shapes, with diamond and circular forms placed above. The carefully chosen colors and shapes give a soft yet dynamic impression, as if the echo of waves is rippling across the ocean.

The artist, Kubota Shigeo is one of the pioneers of fiber art in Kyoto, and is active internationally as a dyeing and weaving artist, such as in International Fiber Art Biennial in Lausanne. Fiber art focuses on unique expressions using different materials and methods, and appeared in the West in the 1960s as a new type of expression, uncaptured by preexisting concepts of dyeing and weaving works. Its developing trend towards threedimensional works such as hanged and standing works also started to attract attention in Kyoto during the 1970s.

In the midst of this trend, Kubota, who was a student at the time, ventured towards experimental works in pursuit of creating new dyeing and weaving expressions. He later recalled that his encounter with sisal hemp during this time was an exact fit of fabric material for his expression of forms and colors. Sisal hemp, with its glossy surface and a combination of strength and flexibility, is commonly used as material for ropes. Making use of these characteristic of sisal hemp, Kubota continues to present avant-garde works to this day which reflect his keen sense in colors and material. Born in Nishijin, the center of textile in Kyoto, Kubota familiarized himself towards the act of weaving since childhood. From this recent work, one can see the skillful spatial arrangement and color effects created using sisal hemp, a material the artist has been exploring for years.
